

If they catch me

Chapter 1 by 20hupj

I hear the sirens behind me, blaring their way down the lit highway, my body casting a shadow on the gravel highway. The white car continues the trek towards me as I run, my foot falls echoing down the road. My blue top clings to my skin with sweat, my black hair pressed against my forehead.

I continue my s sprint, my muscles straining form the effort. Make it to the intersection, I tell myself, make my girl friend proud. I continue, my breathing heavy, the soles of my canvas shoes breaking. I continue my fight in a losing battle, the police sirens closing in.

My chest start's to heave and I can feel the through up rising from the pit of my stomach. My mouth is dry from the nights air and my body cannot take any more. I shudder to a stop, white lights crowding over my vision.

The car skids to a stop, gravel raining down on me. I keep my back to the vehicle and hear the car door slam. A boot knocks me to the ground, my cheeks pressing into the gravel, seating patches all over my top. As I feel the handcuffs dig into my hands, my right eye unseeing in the dirt I ask myself

"Why did I do that to me?"
